

Year5

by Taylor

Week:
25th January

In year five English lessons this week, we have been working on our stories. They are all set in a desert, in Africa, where our intrepid explorer/s are setting off on an adventure to find a Tarantula, Black Vulture, Giant Lizard or any kind of animal you would find in a scorching, hot desert. On Monday we spent the whole lesson planning what our story would be about. We planned this on a backwards S. On Tuesday and Wednesday, we wrote our stories and then on Thursday when we finished our stories, we edited them. We used something called an editing station. An editing station is where every table has a piece of paper and on that piece of paper will be something the people on that table can edit, for example one table might have spelling and grammar and another may have punctuation. We rotate around all the tables so that everyone has visited and completed every editing station. The stories we wrote this week are for the year sixes to read. The year sixes will then tell us how we can improve and what they enjoyed about our stories.

[Type here]

